

“Watch closely,” the Kamikaze instructor told his students, “I’m only going to do this once.”

You know how most people are born with just one funnybone? I have six.

I know, I know....sounds grotesque. Frankly, doctors are baffled.

To answer your imminent question, yes, it is kind of like having a superpower. I can’t walk through walls or anything but I can pretty much bring down the house merely attempting to walk through it.

It’s like staring at a guy who does magic tricks. Once he pulls his first rabbit out, the audience is just mesmerized, waiting to see what’s going to happen next. Basically they want another rabbit (possibly a goat).

And, aside from giving away a free toaster, nothing will grab a listener quite the way a good joke will. It’s like a drug - minus the drained bank account and all that shaking.

People simply love to laugh.

Once you can make them laugh, you have their attention. And, once you have their attention?

Well, that’s the superpower.
